LUMBERMEN, LOG RAFTS, AND SAWMILLS

The Lumber and Timber Industry in Southern West Virginia
by Jack and Kay Dickinson

- ~ Includes the history of timbering in Southern West Virginia and the explosive growth of this industry in the late 1800's and early 20th century.
- ~ Log booms and log rafting on the Big Sandy, Guyandotte, Tug, and Twelvepole Rivers from the Virginia border all the way to the Ohio River.
- ~ The hard life of the lumberjack or "wood hick" in West Virginia.
- ~ Contains alphabetized listing of over 3,000 logging and timber workers in southern West Virginia, from the 1900, 1910 & 1920 censuses.
- ~ Contains several first-person interviews with early twentieth century loggers and timbermen.
- ~ Dozens of previously unpublished photos of logging and sawmilling in these counties.
- ~ The history of the towboats that pushed the log rafts, blew up, burned, were snagged, sank during high water, or just wore out.
- ~ Short histories of the hundreds of small sawmill and lumber companies that operated in the seven counties.
